Monthly Commentary

The Alpha Moderate Fund delivered a total return of 0.29% (net of fees) in December 2024, which was above the Morningstar Australian Moderate Target Allocation Index by +0.74% and the Peer Median by +0.73%. The key driver of the outperformance was our asset allocation decisions favouring global shares (unhedged) and Australian bonds.

Global share markets gave back some of their recent gains and bond yields rose in December, reflecting investors' concerns about tariffs and inflation re-accelerating. The US Dollar further strengthened, and Tesla and Bitcoin continued to boom on the expectation of looser regulations for autonomous driving cars and cryptocurrencies under incoming President Donald Trump. In Australia, Bank shares retraced from recent record highs and our listed property securities underperformed.

The Fund's biggest winners in December included Asian shares (TSMC, Tencent, Alibaba & Geely Automobile) and Large US Technology shares (Alphabet, Amazon.com & Microsoft). The biggest detractor was Novo Nordisk, which fell after disappointing results in a late-stage trial for its nextgeneration obesity drug, CagriSema, while underweight positions in Apple and Tesla were also costly in a relative performance sense. The decision to favour global shares benefited from the weaker Australian Dollar but our positions in longer-dated US treasury bonds detracted.

The Fund is still marginally overweight to Growth Assets and overweight to bonds. We still favour higher quality companies but we are also carrying some exposures to Asia and Australian Resources, which are designed to take advantage of an expected China stimulus.

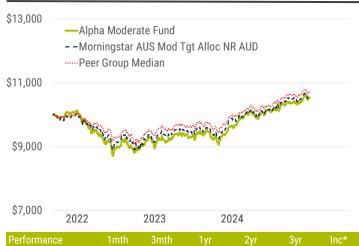

The main changes to the Portfolio were early in December and included:

- Significantly reducing our exposure to the Australian banks based on expensive valuations and reallocating to cheaper global banks.
- Taking new positions (and adding to existing positions) in several asset managers based on the view that Trump will be friendly to share markets.
- Adding to positions in Resources, which are cheap and would benefit from a potential Chinese fiscal stimulus.
- Trimming some key recent winners on valuation grounds, including Apple, Microsoft, Costco and Amazon.com.
- Increasing exposure to Australian bonds on the expectation of local interest rate cuts this year.

Later in the month we also added to our exposure to US Technology, including new positions in Salesforce, Guidewire Software, ServiceNow, Shopify, Autodesk, Keysight Technologies and Workday.
